

Minas Papakostas, Nikos Litinas, Eleni Konsolaki & Constantinos Trompoukis, Facial Scars in the Greek Papyri.

ArchPF 68 (2022) pp. 325-335, figg.

The indication of the location of a scar or scars on various parts of a body was used for the identification of persons in a large number of Greek non-literary documents. Facial scars were mentioned most frequently, obviously because they were the most distinguishing feature of the parts of the body that were not usually covered. - Introduction and the state of research. - Discussion. - The role of the scribes in the description of scars.

2022-0432